BEAUNASH AT BATH.

for notices over four lines.

Though Nash governed as if born to empire, the throne of Bath was not his by right; he had no hereditary claim; he was merely a citizen of the world, an idler in London, an ima strenuous advocate of reform, and at Bath promoted it with all the influence of his potential voice, and enforced it with all the weight of his supreme authority. His first care was to improve the accommodations of his seat of empire. When he first undertook the govern. empire. When he first undertook the government of Bath, it was a mean dirty and incommodious place; the lodgings for visitors were shabby, dirty and expensive; the public rooms were desecrated by all sorts of vulgarity and Is no drastic violent medicine, Is sure to cure if taken regular Is no intoxicating beverage. rudeness. Under the direction and authority of their new monarch, the corporation of Bath re edified their city and noble streets; beautiful squares, verdant gardens, soon combined their attractions with the medicinal waters of the place, to render it the most fashionable city in England. He drew up a code of ceremonial laws which he rigidly enforced, and which were implicitly submitted to by the inhabitants and visitors of the city,

Like all popular monarchs he became very absolute. "I pray your majesty to permit us one dance more," said her Royal Highness, the Princess Amelia, to King Nash, as the clock was strikiug eleven.

Impossible, madam; my laws are like those of Lycurgus-immutable. "But just one, Mr. Nash," persisted the princess.' "I regret to deby your royal highness anything; but it cannot be." The disappointed princess was compelled to too, I assure you.' "It is, I doubt not, all that your grace describes; and in the morning; in your domestic apartments, I shall be happy to note its beauties; but now-" and he held out his hand

"But, Mr. Nash-"
"Madam"-persisted he, firmly, and not without a touch of rudeness.

The duchess colored, hesitated a moment, and then quietly resigned the apron, saying, with much good-humor: "I believe I was wrong; your majesty must forgive me. The king bowed, took the apron, and gave it to the care of an attendant.

An intimation of his royal will carried with it the form of a mandate with all the gentle sexthe other was often refractory. The king, however, was firm, and invariably, in the end, successful. The gentlemen's boots, it is said, made the most obstinate stand against his authorityfor our readers must know that up to the era of this king's reign, the fashionable assemblies of Bath were held in a booth, where the ladies wore aprops and hoods at pleasure, and the gentiemen went equipped with swords, boots and tobacco pipes. The aprons were banished, as we have seen, though not without some demoustrations of opposition on the part of the natured king, who did not like to proceed all at once to the last extremity with the second all and refractory subjects, had recourse to stratagem to effect his purpose. About this time the representations of Punch were the delight of the fashionable world, and the King of Bath announced to his loyal subsubjects that, for their especial recreation, the city. would exhibit a new scene in that hero's life. Full of eager anticipation, the fashionable world of Bath crowded to see the show; and intense, indeed was expectation as the new scene opened with Punch and a beautiful lady preparing for their night's repose; but, to the horror of the fair one, Punch was stepping into bed with his boots on. She desired him to remove them—he refused; she remonstrated, but Punch was firm.

"Madam," said he, "do you, a stranger, presume to instruct me, an inhabitant of this polished and fashionable city, in etiquette? My Boots! Remove by boots! Way, madam, you may as well tell me to pull off my legs; I never go without boots-I never ride. I never dance without them; and this, at Bath, is considered true politeness."

The lady, however, could not be appeased, neither would Pucch submit to the reasonable demand, so the lovers separated in anger. We need hardly say that this ingenious lesson was Nash's contrivance.

A GROWING FAMILY. - The cable announces the birth of another grandchild for Queen Victoria, a boy, the first bady of the Duke and Duches of Edinburgh, who were married at St. Petersburg on the 23rd of January last. This new scion of royalty increases the number of Queen Victoria's graudchildren to twenty-six, living. The Queen's eldest child, the Princess Royal Victoria, wife of the Crown Prince of Germany, has had form and the Crown Prince of Germany, has had four sons and four daughters of which number one son has died. The Queen's second child, the Prince of Wales, married to the Princess Alexandra of Denmark, has had three sons and three daughters, one son being dead. The Queen's third child, the Princess Alice, wife of Prince Louis of Hesse- Darmstadt, has had two sons and five daughters, one son being dead. Next comes the Queen's fourth child, the Duke of Edinburgn, married to the Grand Duchess Maria of Russia, with one son, born yesterday morning. Finally, the queen's fifth child, the Princess Helena, wite of Prince Christian of Schleswigall of whom are living. The Princess Louise, the Queen's sixth child, wife of the Marquis of Lorne, is not yet the head of a famiquis of Lorne, is not yet the head of a famia new variety of Cabbage, and is now offered for
